PREFACE

There has been, of late, considerable legislative activity in the field of agricultural production and development. This brochure seeks to bring together the more important of these Acts passed by the Central and State Governments, bearing on agricultural improvement like land reclamation, land utilisation, cultivation of fallow lands, supply of seeds and manure, construction of irrigation works, soil preservation, crop regulation, crop protection and the formulation and execution of land development schemes. Various Acts in force as in January 1951 on each of these subjects have been arranged together to facilitate easy reference. It is hoped that in view of the paramount importance of increasing agricultural production, a comparative study of these legislative measures would prove useful and suggest lines on which further reforms need to be undertaken.

The detailed work in the preparation of this brochure has been done in the Land Economics Branch of the Directorate by Shri Y. N. Trihan under the supervision of Shri M. S. Menon. Any views expressed in the Introduction should not be taken as the views of the Government of India.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

INTRODUCTION

Agricultural Development in the early years of British Rule.—Until recently, there has hardly been any legislative attempt to control and regulate agricultural production in this country. Such action as was taken was mostly confined to administrative measures like the setting up of Central and Provincial Departments of Agriculture, organization of research and agricultural education, and measures designed to meet the recurrence of famine. The early British administrators were concerned with land chiefly as a source of revenue, and the efforts at land improvement which were attempted by measures like expansion of irrigation, etc., were undertaken mostly with a view to increasing the revenue-paying capacity of the land. This is apparent from one of the despatches of Lord Mayo, which said that “there is perhaps no country in the world in which the State has so immediate and direct an interest in agriculture. The Government of India is not only a Government, but the chief landlord. The land revenue is derived from that portion of the rent which belongs to the State, and not to individual proprietors. Throughout the greater part of India, every measure for the improvement of the land enhances the value of the property of the State.”* Moreover, farming was largely of the self-sufficing type, while the prevalence of payments in kind combined with the difficulties and high cost of transport restricted the markets for agricultural produce to local areas. The village communities had not fully lost their vitality, and the caste and joint family system prescribed the limits of economic competition and determined production according to well-defined methods of routine. Each village produced its own requirements of food and fibre; there was little of specialization, and the usual complement of artisans and handicraftsmen, who were as much part of the village as the land itself, did all the processing that was necessary for the satisfaction of the modest wants of the community.

The Industrial Revolution in England, which also created the necessary conditions for the great improvements in British agriculture in the latter half of the 18th and the early 19th centuries, hit the agricultural economy of India in two ways. Political domination, which in the previous period had jealously kept the Indian goods off the foreign markets, now sedulously encouraged, under the cloak of a convenient doctrine of economic liberalism, the free inflow of large masses of consumable goods. The products of indigenous handicrafts were gradually ousted from the markets of the country, and the Indian artisans, bereft of their calling, crowded back on the land as the only means of sustenance. This, helped also by other circumstances, resulted, on the one hand, in the rapid emergence of the problem of landless proletariat, so long alien to the Indian agricultural economy, and on the other, in the increasing pressure on land, which eventually led to its sub-division into small holdings and fragmented cultivation. The 1931 census revealed that 64 per cent of the rural artisans had forsaken their ancestral occupations and taken to agriculture as the only means of livelihood. The effect of this on the systems of land use and the standard of cultivation will be noticed later in the context of the different legislative measures which have been adopted for effecting improvements in production.

* Sir W. W. Hunter's Life of Lord Mayo, Vol. II, p. 322.

The second significant manner in which the Industrial Revolution affected Indian agriculture was the change in the pattern of crop production which followed the demand for raw materials by Britain's manufacturing industries. Agricultural production, till the middle of the 18th century, was diversified; the farm and the family had knit together production and consumption into a self-sufficing economy. For the first time, however, the Government of India began to take a more lively interest in the cultivation of commercial crops like cotton, largely owing to the insistent pressure of British manufacturing interests like the Manchester Cotton Supply Association. The special cotton tracts of the Deccan were developed in this manner, while the setting up of the jute mills of Dundee which received an impetus from the use made of jute sacking by the Dutch Government for their East India Coffee trade round about 1838, resulted in the specialization of large areas in Bengal in the growing of jute.*

In spite, however, of the establishment of peace and order in the country, the definition of landed rights, and the improvements effected in communications and irrigation, the outbreak of famines continued to be a recurring feature during the latter half of the 19th century also. Between 1800 and 1900 no fewer than 31 famines devastated different parts of the country taking a heavy toll of life estimated at 32.4 millions. The series of Commissions which reviewed the position at the close of each such outbreak laid emphasis on the paramount need to set up a strong Department of Agriculture for dealing with agricultural problems and to organize research for conducting scientific investigation into cultural requirements and practices.

Food and Population.—The famines of those days were, however, the result of local and temporary factors, like the failure of rains, weakness of the administrative machinery, which was as yet inexperienced in standing up to the sudden strain and the undeveloped systems of transport and communication, which failed to prevent local shortage from deteriorating into famine. The large exports of cereals from the country, which continued unabated even during the periods of famine, support the assumption that despite regional scarcities, the overall food position of the country was reasonably satisfactory. In 1901-2, the value of the exports of rice and wheat from India amounted to about 11 1/2 millions sterling. The Famine Commission of 1880 estimated that the country had a normal surplus of 5 million tons of foodgrains, after satisfying internal needs calculated on the basis of a ration of 1 1/2 lbs. per diem for an ordinary adult working male. Gradually, an elaborate mechanism of famine control and relief was built up, roads and railways broke the barriers of the land-locked village and brought Indian agriculture within the orbit of world economy. Under the stimulus of settled conditions of life and peaceful trade, well defined landed rights and the rising trend of internal and foreign demand, the prices of agricultural produce like rice, wheat, raw cotton and jute registered considerable increase in the course of a decade, from 1910 to 1920. It looked as if the stage was well set for an era of agricultural prosperity.

A number of things, however, happened which had the opposite effect on agriculture. Firstly, in the absence of organized institutions of farmers and owing to the system of land holding which prevailed and the apathy of the State, very little of the benefit of this rise in prices was passed on to the actual cultivator, and by far the largest share went into the hands of the hordes of middlemen, like landlords, merchants and money-lenders, which the system created. There was thus little improvement in the actual technique of production, the standard of cultivation or even in the economic position of the agriculturist. Secondly, the change in demand brought about a corresponding change in the pattern of crop production. On the whole, the cultivator of commercial crops fared better than the cultivator of food crops, and this resulted in a gradual shift of emphasis from the production of food crops to non-food crops. While, therefore, the area under food crops increased in the course of 40 years from 1899 by only about 12 per cent. in the territories which formerly comprised British India, the area under non-food crops went up by about 60 per cent. Whatever be the advantages that might have accrued to the country as a result of this diversion, it certainly made the food position of the country one of increasing vulnerability. The completion of the canal projects in the Punjab and Sind and the development of the Irrawaddy delta during the early years of the 20th century, no doubt, enabled the country to avoid full scale famines; but from being an exporter of foodgrains, the country gradually became a net importer, the annual export of about half a million tons of wheat from Punjab and Sind in the years preceding World War II being counterbalanced by imports of about a million and a half tons of rice from Burma. Thirdly, the settlement of land and the numerous gradation of rights on the soil which gradually grew up, produced a host of problems. The upper layers lost organic touch with actual production and contented themselves with collecting their share of the produce without performing corresponding services, while the actual tillers, mulcted of an increasingly larger share of the results of their labour, lost the will and the capacity to improve the land. Fourthly, the commercialization of agriculture brought one more element of uncertainty into the economic condition of the farmer, viz., uncertainty of income arising from instability of prices. The depression of the thirties brought ruin to many of the agriculturists. Between 1928-29 and 1933-34, the value of the principal crops in British India declined by about 53.6 per cent. The fall in the prices of primary goods was steeper than that of manufactured goods and, as Sir George Schuster remarked, "India felt the severity of the fall in the case of what she had to sell, but did not obtain a corresponding advantage of the fall in prices of what she had to buy". While the prices of exported goods, which were mainly agricultural, recorded a fall of about 45.9 per cent. between 1929 and 1934, the fall in the prices of imports, which were mainly manufactured, was only 28.2 per cent. This disparity in the fall of prices further aggravated the economic distress of the agriculturists. Finally, the drift from the old moorings following the break-up of the old self-regulated institutions of the village and the joint family, the removal of some of the positive checks like war and famine, and the increasing poverty of the masses which reduced incentives to restrain the size of the families, took away checks on growth of population which like a released spring spurted upward with alarming rapidity. The results were seen in the rapid diminution of per capita sown and cultivable area, fall in consumption standards and increasing malnutrition, the fragmentation and sub-division of agricultural holdings, the lowering of the yield of land and the progressive rise of a landless proletariat. The population of the Indian Union (excluding Jammu and Kashmir and the tribal areas of Assam and Sikkim) increased in the course of 30 years from 1921 to 1951 by 43.8 per cent.

Dim forebodings of population outstripping the means of subsistence and eventually proving a menace not merely to prosperity, but even to existence, were contained in the reports of the Famine Commissions even as far back as 1880. The Commission in that year, although they solaced themselves on the then availability of a normal surplus of 5 million tons of foodgrains, could not altogether banish the fear from their minds that the increase of population at the rate it was proceeding might eat up all the estimated yearly surplus, unless production was stepped up to keep pace with the increase. Two members of the Commission, who appended a note of dissent to the report, took even a more gloomy view of the future. By 1930, the situation had become more grave. Writing in 1932, Sir John Megaw, the Director-General of Health Services, observed that "taking India as a whole the dispensary doctors regard 39% of the population as being well nourished, 41% as being poorly nourished and 20% as being very badly nourished". He concluded that "the growth of population has already begun to outrun the increase in the production of the necessities of life, so that even the existing low standard of economic life must inevitably become still lower unless radical change is brought about. The outlook for the future is gloomy to a degree not only for the masses of the people, who must face an intensified struggle for bare subsistence, but also for the upper classes whose income depends upon production of a surplus of crops and other commodities”.

During all this period when the economic position of the agriculturist was steadily deteriorating, and production was being clogged in several directions by the severity of the depression, the population was multiplying with unabated vigour. Between 1921 and 1941 we had added to ourselves by another 66.6 millions, or by about 26 per cent. While total production remained more or less stationary, the per capita sown area, which affords an index of the pressure of population on resources, underwent a reduction during the course of 20 years, from 1921 to 1941, by 20 per cent. The necessary consequences of this prolific increase also worked themselves out on the land economy with relentless pressure. Land became increasingly chopped up into smaller and smaller fragments; the yield declined still further and the class of landless labourers swelled in number.

The war and the post-war years have been years of further travail. The initial years after the outbreak of the war brought some prosperity to the agriculturist; but this was shortlived and the rise in costs of cultivation soon caught up with the rise in agricultural prices. The standards of cultivation declined owing to a combination of causes. Some of the good cultivators were drawn away to war occupations; draught animals of good quality became more scarce and the material requisites of production came to be in short supply. With the clamping down of controls, the margins between cost and returns became narrower, while restrictions on alienations of land, regulation of money-lending and the enforcement of other debt relief measures caused increasing tension in the credit market.

No sooner was the war over than the country was overtaken by a fresh and more serious crisis. The partition of the country, followed by the movement to and fro of large masses of population on a scale unprecedented in the history of the world, brought problems, which it will take the united efforts of the whole nation for a number of years to completely overcome. The Indian Union got 82 per cent. of the population of undivided India, but only 77 per cent. of the area. About 7 to 8 lakh tons of foodgrains which used to be supplied by the areas now in Pakistan were lost. This came on the top of the effects of war, during which period stocks had almost been completely denuded and imports could be obtained only with great difficulty. Agricultural production in the rest of the world was also very slow in reviving, and the fact that Europe became increasingly dependent on supplies from America, made India's chances of getting wheat from that country more difficult. The South East Asian region, the rice bowl of the world, already prostrated by the devastation caused by the war, became increasingly embroiled in internal troubles and ceased for a time to be a dependable source of supply. In the mean time, the necessity to keep the home industries alive and earn foreign exchange for the purchase of capital requirements and essential supplies from abroad, made it necessary for the country to step up the production of cotton and jute besides that of foodgrains. At this grave juncture, when the resources of the country were being already subject to very heavy strain, came the Korean War which made supply and stocks position more difficult and gave a further thrust upward to costs and prices.

The population during all this period of stress and strain had gone on expanding at the rate of more than 1 per cent. per annum and now stands in the neighbourhood of 360 millions. The density of population has continued to increase considerably during the last half a century, representing a rise of 65.4 per cent. as compared with that of 1901. The Indian Union has an average population density of 296 persons per sq. mile, which is more than twice that of China, nearly six times that of U.S.A., more than three times as high as in Siam and Burma and about 50 per cent. more than in France. This increasing pressure has further dwindled the per capita sown area to less than 0·7 acres, touching as low as 0·27 acres in the State of Travancore-Cochin.

The Grow More Food Campaign.—It was in this context of growing scarcities and growing demand and the difficulty and expenditure involved in getting supplies from abroad, that the policy of making the country self-sufficient in her major requirements gradually took shape. The policy had its origin in the difficult period immediately after the outbreak of the last great war, when the closure of the foreign markets for Indian cotton, followed closely by the stoppage of food supplies from abroad, forced on the Government the necessity of regulating for the first time agricultural production in national interests. Vigorous efforts were made to increase the area under foodgrains by diverting the acreage under commercial crops, like cotton and jute, to food. The methods adopted to achieve this objective consisted of propaganda and persuasion, fixation of minimum prices for foodstuff at a comparatively higher level and legislative action. By an amendment of the Defence of India Act then in force, the Government took over statutory powers to control and regulate agriculture. Rule 88B was issued under that Act in January 1944, empowering the Central and Provincial Governments to regulate crop areas and to prohibit the growing of particular crops. Some Provinces and States like Madras, Bombay, Hyderabad and Baroda took legislative action by compulsory restriction of acreage under cotton.

In the mean while, a Conference of the representatives of the Central Government, Provinces (now Part A States) and Indian States (now Part B States) which met in April 1942, framed a number of resolutions which formed the basis of what has come to be called the Grow More Food Campaign. The Campaign was designed mainly to maximise the food supplies of the country in the shortest possible time within the limits permitted by available resources. The measures taken under the Grow More Food Campaign fall under the following heads :—

- (i) Attempts to increase the area under food and fodder crops by (a) bringing new land; including fallow land, under cultivation; (b) double cropping; and (c) diverting land from non-food crops to food crops;
- (ii) Increase in the supplies of water for irrigation by the improvement and extension of existing irrigation canals, the construction of additional wells, etc;
- (iii) The extended use of manures and fertilisers;
- (iv) An increase in the supply of improved seeds; and
- (v) Supply of agricultural machinery and implements.

The campaign has proceeded through different stages of change dictated by circumstances and experience. Until 1947, there was no definite plan or target, schemes were formulated on ad hoc basis by the States, and the Central Government confined itself to granting subsidies and loans to such schemes as were approved by it. In 1947, a five-year target was drawn up by the Central Government and accepted by the States. Meanwhile, the partition of the country accentuated the deficit in foodgrains; imports were increasing, causing a heavy drain on India's foreign exchange resources. By 1949, it came to be felt that the food self-sufficiency programme had to be placed on an emergency footing. The intention of the Emergency Plan was to increase the country's production to the extent necessary to make it self-sufficient in foodgrains by the end of March 1952. Imports thereafter were to be confined to quantities necessary for (a) creating a reserve, (b) meeting losses in production due to unexpected natural calamities, and (c) making good the losses in foodgrains likely to be caused by the planned diversion of area from foodgrains to cotton and jute. The Grow More Food Campaign has now been assimilated into an integrated production programme which embraces food-grains, cotton, jute, oilseeds and sugarcane. It has been recognized that while increased production of foodgrains is necessary primarily for meeting the consumption requirements of the country, that of cotton and jute is essential for the supply of raw materials for national industries and for avoiding unemployment and loss of foreign exchange. The Campaign is now concentrated in selected zones likely to show the best results, preference being given to schemes of permanent improvement, like tubewells, etc., rather than to schemes of a recurring character.

The Grow More Food Campaign has served to high-light the weak spots in the country's agricultural economy and bring up forcefully before the public the need to reorganize agriculture on a more rational and productive basis. This is evidenced by the great burst of legislative activity witnessed in recent years in spheres of agricultural production in which the State had not so long interfered. These comprise measures designed to bring more area under cultivation and measures intended to stimulate production in areas already under cultivation.

Extensive Cultivation.—From the statistical tables relating to land utilization it would appear that large areas are potentially cultivable although for various reasons they remain at present uncultivated.

Classification of Area—India

Particulars	Average 1936-37 to 1938-39	(Thousand acres) 1948-49
1. Area according to village papers	546,228	581,436
2. Area under Forest	81,505	83,425
3. Area not available for cultivation	91,038	96,735
4. Other uncultivated land excluding current fallows	86,984	93,229
5. Fallow land	48,665	62,439
6. Net area sown	237,961	244,274
7. Area sown more than once	30,147	33,530
8. Gross area sown	268,108	279,473

In the conventional estimates, therefore, an area of about 93 million acres appear as cultivable waste. Much of this land, however, is practically uncultivable; some are covered by scrub jungles or infested by weeds; some are cut up into ravines by soil erosion and some are highly malarial, water-logged or saline. From information furnished by the State Governments, an area of only about 10 to 11 million acres is definitely known so far to be cultivable under existing conditions and the reclamation of even these would need heavy capital expenditure and time.* Besides these cultivable waste lands, an area comprising about 62 million acres is classified as fallow land. There has been a noticeable increase in the area of fallow land since the pre-war period, due perhaps in some measure at first to restrictions on the cultivation of commercial crops and the difficulty of immediately switching over to food crops and later to the dislocation in normal production caused by large scale movement of refugees after partition, unsettled conditions of tenure following the several reforms which are in different stages of implementation, shortage of credit and supplies, adverse seasonal conditions, etc.,

The result has been a rapid reduction in the per capita sown area revealing the growing intensity of the pressure of population on the soil. In the pre-war triennium, the population was 306.8 million; in 1950 it had risen to 357.4† million. On the other hand, the area under cereals has only increased by 3.5 million acres. The per capita area under cereals has, therefore, declined by 12.7%.

* K. M. Munshi's Food and People, No. 2, p. 37.

† Excluding Sikkim. Figures supplied by the Census Commissioner.

This pressing need to augment food resources and the no less imperative necessity to increase side by side the production of cotton and jute to meet internal demand, have made the Central as well as State Governments to consider seriously all possibilities of extending the margin of cultivation to lands which have remained unused or gone out of cultivation. The steps taken in this direction include measures for the reclamation of lands infested areas, cultivation of fallow and uncultivated land, the proper preservation and protection of land from soil erosion, the undertaking of development schemes for the improvement of land in specified areas, crop regulation and planning and the provision, wherever possible, of facilities for mechanical cultivation. Necessary legislation has been passed in many of the States enabling the Government to require the cultivation of all cultivable land either by the proprietor or tenant himself or, if he was unwilling, through any other agency that Government may designate. Acts have been passed for securing the other objectives also.

Intensive Cultivation.—A more fruitful source of securing increased production is by the more efficient cultivation of land which is already under the plough. The schemes for this purpose include (a) work schemes, such as construction of wells, tanks, channels, small dams, contour bunding, etc., and (b) supply schemes such as the distribution of chemical fertilisers, manures, compost and improved seeds and schemes for plant protection.

Low yield and its causes.—The most outstanding feature of Indian agriculture is the consistently low yield per acre of most of the principal crops grown. The yield in India is one of the lowest compared with the other countries of the world.

Some explanation of the comparatively low yield may be found in the climatic and ecological factors which affect production and in the different methods of computation in India and in other countries. There is an absence of adequate data on yields of the major food crops in relation to wide ranges in climatic and soil types prevailing in India. The raising of more than one crop in an area and more than one cropping in a year also make comparison of yields difficult. Even after making allowance for all these factors, however, it must be conceded that the yield of crops in India is exceedingly low as compared with other countries.

A more disconcerting feature of the situation is the gradual fall in the yields of the principal food crops. The yield per acre of rice has fallen from 866 lbs. in 1929 to 699 lbs. in 1948 and of wheat from 741 lbs. to 573 lbs. per acre during the same period. Dr. Panse has computed, from information available in Ain-i Akbari, that the average yield on medium type of poolej (annually cultivated) land during the reign of Akbar, was 2,240 lbs. on an acre of wheat land (equal to the present average yield in Western Europe), 2,333 lbs. on rice land (equal to that in China) and 1,940 lbs. on jowar land.* The downward trend of yields may be due partly to new marginal lands of lower level of fertility having been brought under cultivation as a result of the relentless pressure of population on the soil, and partly to other reasons. The more important of the latter are (1) poor water supply, (2) inadequacy of manures and fertilisers, (3) inferior quality of seed, (4) unscientific cultural practices and ill-planned distribution of crops, and (5) absence of measures for crop protection. Defective farm organization, resulting from the uneconomic size of the production unit, lack of capital for operational and improvement purposes, low quality of cattle, mechanical and human power employed on land and failure to connect research with application, is another important contributory cause which will be dealt with in more detail in other volumes.

Water Supply.—The most important factor for improving per acre yields is adequate and timely water supply. Out of about 243 million acres of net area sown in India, the total irrigated area amounts only to about 51 million acres or 21 per cent. About 4/5th of the cultivated area is thus dependent purely on the monsoon. Even in irrigated areas, the supply is often defective with the result that delayed plantings cause much avoidable loss amounting to 20 to 30 per cent. of normal yields. In regions of heavy rainfall, absence of proper drainage facilities depresses yields and throws land out of cultivation by yearly erosion of soil. It is estimated that about 2 per cent. of surface soil is lost every year through erosion.† In areas of low rainfall, yields are kept down for want of sufficient nutrients in the soil. or if manures and fertilisers are applied, they do more harm than good in the absence of adequate water supply. The high average yields of rice in Japan, Italy and Spain are due to its cultivation under irrigation and heavy manuring. In Japan about 95 per cent of the area under rice is irrigated, while in India not more than 25 per cent of the rice area is under irrigation. The construction of large dams and irrigation projects can be done by Government, but it may be possible for minor irrigation works like tanks, wells and small canals to be constructed and maintained by the cultivators themselves, if necessary with assistance from the Government, either individually or co-operatively. In the interests of efficient cultivation, the repairs, improvements and construction of small irrigation and drainage works and embankments even on private lands have come to be recognized as a public responsibility, and Governments have armed themselves with necessary legislative sanction for enforcing or carrying out works of this kind.

Manures and fertilisers.—Due to continuous cropping and indifferent manuring, the soils in most of the areas in India have become stabilized at a very low level of fertility. The soil is the main source of food material to the crops and should be capable of supplying the requirements of the plants in respect of their main ingredients in a balanced proportion year after year. In tropical and subtropical regions, the humus in the soil is burnt away by the scorching heat of the sun. The organic by-products of most crops, such as stalks, leaves, etc., are utilised as cattle feed or thatching material and are not returned to the soil except in small proportions. Of the cattle dung produced, equivalent to about 200 million tons of Farm Yard Manure, it is estimated that about 40 per cent. is used as fuel, 20 per cent. is lost and only about 40 per cent finds its way to the soil. Green manuring has gone down in practice owing to the difficulty of getting water and the encroachment of cultivation under pressure of population. The conversion of vegetation and refuse into compost has not been resorted to on any wide scale until recently. Poudrette is not used on account of religious and social prejudices. Thus the humus status of the soils has been steadily going down. The best results are secured when both organic and inorganic materials are used in suitable combination for manuring, the latter in small quantities as top dressing at planting time or soon after. In China and Japan, it is reported that as much as 67 per cent. of the nitrogen applied to crops is in the form of compost. Together with the increased use of artificial manures and fertilisers, therefore, every effort has to be made to prepare and conserve Farm Yard Manure and compost out of villages and town sweepings and garbage.

Varieties.—A minimum of 10 per cent improvement in yields by the use of improved varieties can, it has been established, be easily secured. However, in spite of years of extension services, it has been estimated that only 20 per cent. of the area is under such improved varieties. To achieve the rapid spread of such varieties, considerable improvements in the existing organization for multiplication and distribution of seeds will have to be effected and measures for encouraging the use of these seeds taken.

Cultural practices.—India has a long tradition of sound cultural practice. But there has been a gradual deterioration due to lack of encouragement, proper technical help and the migration of more efficient agricultural labourers to industrial cities. In several directions the existing practices require improvement. It is roughly estimated that in nearly 30 per cent. of the cultivated area, cultural operations are often delayed due to lack of proper facilities. The advantages of transplanting of rice crop instead of broadcasting in areas of assured water supply, thin sowing of rice in nursery areas, early ploughing, weeding, etc., will have to be brought home to the agriculturists. In any scheme of long range planning, the aspect of proper distribution of crops in relation to ecological adaptability will have to be taken into account.

Study of recent legislation.—There has thus been in recent years a greater appreciation of the dangers to crop production which result from negligence or ignorance of the factors mentioned above. This has found expression in legislative enactments which seek to enforce better standards of cultivation in the general interests of the community.

The war and the partition of the country and the resultant scarcity in food and industrial raw materials tended to change radically the attitude of the Government to agricultural improvement. The immediate necessity for legislative action in the sphere of agricultural production was no doubt the need to bridge the gap, within as short a time as possible, between requirements and resources. But underlying these was also a change in the basic conception of Government's responsibility for evolving better standards of production and for improving the living conditions of the rural community. Agricultural improvement thus ceased to be solely the problem of the administrator and the research worker, but also a social responsibility, on which the community felt increasingly compelled to give its opinion and to lay down directives of action. This change in attitude is reflected in the extraordinary legislative activity witnessed in recent years in the sphere of agricultural production. The legislative steps taken in this direction cover broadly the measures designed to secure extension and improvement of agriculture and rural development.

The important Acts passed by the different States for these purposes may be broadly classified under the following heads :—

- (i) Extension of cultivation.
- (ii) Crop planning and crop regulation.
- (iii) Improvements in Agricultural practices.
- (iv) Permanent improvements in land.
- (v) Preservation of crops and cattle.
- (vi) Rural development.

EXTENSION OF CULTIVATION

Fallow and Waste Lands.—In most of the States, large areas of culturable lands which are included in holdings or survey numbers are lying fallow for various reasons. In some cases, rents are paid for these lands, but the owners do not think it worth their while to bring the land under cultivation; in others, no rent is paid for the lands but the lands are still left uncultivated mostly because of lack of incentives to bring them under cultivation. Some of these lands are also not cultivated because of the fear that if the lands are let out to tenants, they may come to acquire permanent rights in the land. The legislations passed in regard to the cultivation of fallow lands have, therefore, as their main objective, the compulsion of the owners of such lands to bring these lands under cultivation either themselves or through lessees. The Central Provinces and Berar Cultivation of Fallow Lands Act, 1948 (as amended subsequently) requires that every holder shall cultivate each year so much area of occupied land as was under cultivation in the immediately preceding year. He shall, however, be liable to bring fallow lands under cultivation according to a sliding scale for different groups of landholders based on the area of occupied land held by them. Non-observance of this provision makes them liable to a fine, which may extend to Rs. 25 per acre of area required to be cultivated under this Act. Certain lands, which are used for fodder crops or for grazing cattle are exempted from these provisions on application from the occupants. In cases, where the right holder is unable to make arrangements for cultivation, he may apply to the village committee and thereafter the Tehsildar will lease out such land to a tenant for cultivation or to a suitable lessee for a period not less than 5 years and not more than 7 years on the bare assessment or on such terms as can be secured. It is also provided that legal disability consequent on the habitual sub-letting of land or the leasing of khud kasht land will not apply to the fallow land so leased out. The Act, therefore, safeguards the rights of the original holders of the land.

The U.P. Land Utilisation Act, 1947 (extended to Delhi, Bhopal and Ajmer), and the Punjab Land Utilisation Act, 1949, also require the owners to take steps to get the land cultivated if it is remaining uncultivated for a specified period (one season in the case of U.P. and six harvests in the case of Punjab). If the landlord fails to cultivate the land as directed, the Collector is empowered to get such land cultivated on behalf of the Government by a tenant for such period as he thinks necessary. Under the Punjab Act, the period for which the land is let out is not less than 8 years. The land is to be leased by auction, but it is proposed to give preference to co-operative farming societies. In order to enable landlords to undertake cultivation, the Punjab Government are advancing loans for sinking of surface percolation wells and purchase of tractors and for installation of tube-wells, pumping sets, etc. Besides these facilities, Government tractors maintained by the Agriculture Department, are given on hire to landlords. The period of lease of the lands so taken over is generally not less than 7 years and not more than 20 years. Notice is given only in regard to such lands as can be usefully broken and are not required for essential purposes other than growing more food, e.g., grazing, fuel, plantation, etc. The leased lands are included in the scheme only if they are not required for a common purpose. The lessee is not authorised to assign, transfer, mortgage or sub-let the land leased or premises thereon or any part thereof, neither can they use the land for any purpose other than that of sowing food and fodder crops.

The Madhya Bharat Land Utilisation Act, Samvat 2007 (Act No. 38 of 1950), also contains similar provisions relating to fallow lands. Under the Act, the State may fix the ratio between the cultivated and fallow land and enforce it even in the backward tracts by offering incentives in the shape of reduction of rents if the ratio is observed. If the percentage of fallow land in the holding of a tenant is higher than what may be fixed by the Government for the area, the Tehsildar may call upon the tenant to bring the excess fallow land under cultivation by himself or through a sub-lessee from the succeeding agricultural year. If it is shown that the land is not capable of being cultivated, or that it is already being cultivated, the Tehsildar is empowered to cancel the notice given. If the tenant refuses to comply with the orders, the Tehsildar is empowered to sub-let the land for a period not exceeding five years and the tenant shall be entitled to receive the rent from the sub-lessee. The Act provides a penalty of Rs. 500 for contravention of the provision.

Mysore has also brought forward a similar Bill, viz., the Cultivation of Fallow Lands Act, 1951, under which the holder of occupied land in excess of 10 acres of wet land or 15 acres of dry land may be required to cultivate himself or through a lessee, such additional area of fallow lands as the Amildar may specify. Lands required for grazing can be exempted from these provisions. A penalty, which may be equal to one year's assessment, can be imposed on the holder for not carrying out the directions of Amildar. The Amildar is also empowered to lease out such lands for 5 years to a suitable lessee if the owner expresses his inability to carry out the orders.

For reclamation of waste lands, Acts have been passed in the States of Bihar, Punjab, Ajmer, Delhi and Bhopal, empowering the State Governments to declare any area as "Reclamation Area" and to acquire it for the purpose of reclamation and improvement. Several Land Utilisation Acts already referred to, also contain provisions for bringing both waste and fallow lands under cultivation. Similarly, for the purpose of eradication of kans, the State Governments in Bhopal, Madhya Pradesh and Madhya Bharat can undertake the necessary operations. The Governments are also empowered to appoint Kans Eradication Committees to assist them in carrying out such work. Where the State takes up the land for reclamation and cultivation, the cost incurred can be recovered from the landlords in one lump sum or in a number of annual instalments. In Bhopal, the payments to government may be in cash or kind. The Bihar measure, which is very comprehensive in scope, provides for a maximum period of possession, i.e., ten years, repayment of charges due to the Government in not more than ten instalments and 3 per cent. interest on payments thus due. To facilitate mechanical operations, the Reclamation officers in Bhopal are empowered to reshape the holdings, provided the aggregate area of any holding does not, as far as possible, increase or decrease as a result of re-shaping. The reclaimed land will, after the operations are completed, be restored to the owners. The Delhi and Ajmer-Merwara Land Development Act, 1948, also provides for the constitution of Land Development Boards, which may draw up schemes for the reclamation of lands lying waste due to water-logging, accumulation of sand, growth of jungle, soil erosion or any other causes. The execution of such schemes may be entrusted to any person, or the owner himself can do it if he so wishes, or it may be got done by the Land Development Commission. Under the Land Reclamation Acts, reclamation is generally done by the Government and the cost recovered from the landlord. Under the Land Utilisation Acts, which apply also to waste lands, the owner is directed to reclaim the lands in the first instance and it is only on his failing to do so that the Government arranges for its cultivation. The Travancore-Cochin Land Development Act, 1950, similarly provides for the Constitution of Land Development Boards for carrying out improvements in land and for reclamation of water-logged or otherwise waste land.

Encouragement for bringing uncultivated lands under cultivation is also sought to be given by the provision of definite incentives. The Kumaun Nayabad and Waste Lands Act, 1948, gives every person cultivating land in Kumaun District a right to extend his cultivation over adjoining un-measured land. The person so extending cultivation shall possess the same rights over such areas as he has in his original cultivated area. Villages, in which 75% or more of the total culturable area has already been brought under cultivation, or where the Deputy Commissioner of the Division has prohibited such extensions without his permission are, however, exempted from the operation of the Act. In Assam and Madhya Pradesh, the assessment on revenue-free lands has been increased to full level so that the owners may be induced to put such lands under the plough in order to raise enough to cover the land revenue. The Madhya Bharat Land Utilisation Act gives exemption from the payment of rents in respect of lands, which are brought under cultivation in economically backward and under-developed areas. The Act also enjoins the landholders and tenants to bring at least half the area under cultivation within one year, three-fourth within two years and at least nine-tenth of the area within three years. Indirect incentives in the shape of ultimate ownership are also given to the landlords, who otherwise would lose these lands under the Zamindari Abolition Acts in Madhya Pradesh and Madhya Bharat and under the Talukdari Abolition Act, 1949, in Bombay, if the landlords bring under cultivation such waste lands in their possession before the date of vesting.

IMPROVEMENTS IN AGRICULTURAL PRACTICES

Improved Seed.—The use of improved varieties of seeds has been encouraged in various places by the distribution of better yielding strains at reasonable or subsidized prices. Though arrangements for distribution of improved seeds, sometimes treated with sulphur to prevent misuse, have been made in some States, yet only in Punjab has an act been passed by the Government assuming responsibility for supplying improved seeds to the cultivators through authorized agents. The Punjab Improved Seeds and Seedlings Act, 1950, makes it incumbent on the cultivators in any notified area to use only the improved varieties stored by authorized agents on behalf of the Department of Agriculture. Such authorized agents are required to stock only improved varieties of seeds and seedlings and are prohibited from withholding supplies of such seed. The officers of the Agriculture Department are empowered to enter any field for the purpose of ascertaining whether improved varieties are being grown or not. Any offence against the provisions is punishable with a fine which may extend to Rs. 100. Under the Delhi and Ajmer-Merwara Land Development Act, 1948, the Government can draw up a scheme for introducing improved varieties of seed.

Manures.—The farmers' main sources of manures are cattle dung, green manure, oil cakes and, to a limited extent, artificial fertilizers. In order to see that full use is made of the potential manure available in the town and village refuse, the State Governments have directed the Municipalities and Village Committees to prepare compost from such refuse. The Bombay Municipal Boroughs (Amendment) Act, 1949, and Madhya Pradesh Municipalities (Third Amendment) Act, 1949, have been passed to include "disposing of night soil and rubbish and if so required by the Provincial Government preparation of compost manure from such night soil and rubbish", among the functions of the Municipalities. In the Punjab the Small Towns Committees Act, 1921, and the Municipal Act, 1911, have been amended to require such Committees to convert dung into compost manure in the prescribed manner. The Committees, if they require land for making pits and trenches, can acquire it on payment of compensation. Similar legislation has been passed in some other States, for example, Madhya Bharat and Hyderabad. The East Punjab Conservation of Manure Act, 1949 (as amended in 1950), provides for the setting up of Manure Conservation Committees. The State Government is empowered to declare any area situated within the limits of any one tehsil to be a notified area, and the occupier of any building in such area is required to conserve manure, or arrange for its conservation, in the prescribed manner and to the prescribed extent. The Manure Conservation Committees are vested with funds to be utilized for meeting charges in connection with their duties under the Act. The Committees are authorized to depute officers or members to enter upon any land and to ascertain whether manure is being conserved in the prescribed manner. The penalty for disobedience is Rs. 25 for the first offence, with a further fine, which may extend to Rs. 4 for every day after the first, during which the offence continues. The work of the Committees may also be supervised by the Deputy Commissioner. The Madhya Bharat Refuse (Conversion into Manure) Ordinance, Samvat 2006, also embodies the same principle and requires every head of the family to conserve manure. The Hyderabad Requisitioning of Land Ordinance of 1951 F. provides for the appointment of a "competent authority" to arrange for the composting of village refuse or preparing any other form of manure. The State Government, for the purposes of this Act, may acquire any land which may be required by the competent authority.* The Delhi and Ajmer Land Development Acts provide for the supply of manure through the Boards set up under the Act.

The movement and sale of important manures and fertilizers, like oil cakes, etc., have been controlled in many States under the various Acts passed for the control of essential supplies. In Madras, an order under the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act requires licensing of manure dealers.

Tractor Cultivation.—Tractor cultivation is being carried on in some States for reclamation of culturable waste lands. In the Punjab, the Government have extended to all cultivators the facilities to get their lands cultivated by Government tractors on payment of necessary charges. The East Punjab Tractor Cultivation (Recovery of Charges) Act, 1949, requires that persons desirous of availing this facility should deposit the necessary charges along with their applications. Bona fide refugees are exempted from this advance deposit. The exact fees for each type of operations, like ploughing, discing, seed drilling and sohaga (Harrow), are prescribed under the rules for different kinds of soil.

It is also provided in the rules that at least a minimum area of 40 acres, whether owned singly or jointly by a number of landlords, should be offered at one time. The Madhya Bharat Government have also passed an Act, the Madhya Bharat Tractor Cultivation (Recovery of Charges) Act, samvat 2007, Act No. 83 of 1950 on the same lines as the Punjab Act. Some of the State Governments are also giving taccavi loans to the cultivators for the purchase of tractors.

PERMANENT IMPROVEMENTS IN LAND

Soil Preservation.—In order to prevent the soil from deterioration and to recover the losses due to erosion, the Governments have enacted legislation which permits them to maintain the fertility of the soil by taking anti-soil erosion measures. The Punjab Land Preservation Act, originally passed in 1900, has been amended in 1950, and aims at controlling and checking the draining away of soil. A similar Act passed in Jammu and Kashmir provides for better preservation and protection of certain portion of the State situated adjacent to the mountainous range liable to be affected by the action of water. The Government may call upon the owners of the land within the notified area to take the indicated steps within a definite period in order to (i) regulate the flow of water of the khud or nalla, (ii) prevent the widening or extension of bed of such nallas, and (iii) reclaim and protect any site situated within the limits of such beds. In case of default, the Government may eject the tenant and take the necessary measure. In 1946, the Government of Bombay appointed a Land Improvement Committee, which, inter alia, suggested various methods for soil conservation and land improvement. The Bombay Land Improvement Schemes Act authorises the Government to take steps for preservation and improvement of soil, prevention of soil erosion, control and maintenance of tree growth, and prohibition and control of grazing. Every district in Bombay will have a Board with representatives of the public, besides officials, for the preparation of improvement schemes. In Bengal and Madras, this task will be entrusted to the Board of Revenue and the prescribed authority respectively, whereas in Travancore-Cochin, Delhi and Ajmer, the State Government will set up Land Development Boards for the same purpose. Officers will be appointed to draw up draft schemes for notified areas including therein the objectives, of the measure, the boundaries of their operation, the approximate area of land and the works to be executed. The Madras Land Improvement Schemes (Contour Bunding and Contour Trenching) Act, 1949, also provides for preparing schemes for land improvement, including contour bunding and contour trenching and their execution in the same way as the Bombay and Ajmer Acts. The schemes may be passed, rejected or modified by the Boards in the light of the criticism by those affected, or on its own consideration. In Bombay and Bengal, the schemes are to be finally approved by the State Governments. In other States, the authority of the Board is final. Again, in Bombay, if the number of affected landholders who oppose the scheme is more than 33% of the whole area, or if the area held by them is more than 33% of the aggregate area, then the scheme may be dropped. In Bombay, Madras, Delhi and Ajmer, the landholders might execute this scheme, but in case of unsatisfactory progress, the execution may, in Bombay and Madras, be taken up and finalized by the authorities at the owner's cost.

The Government may call upon the beneficiaries to pay the whole or part of the cost incurred. This amount and other dues are to be recovered as if they are arrears of land revenue. In Bombay, if a certain minimum improvement of land is desirable, the Reclamation Officer may take up the execution of the schemes without caring for the contemplated schemes of the landholder. The landholder is required to repair and maintain the work on his land. Rents might be enhanced as a result of the improvement affected. If famine or scarcity conditions prevail or are apprehended, the Government may direct the preparation of improvement schemes for threatened areas.

The Bombay Khar Land Act, 1948, provides for the protection of khar land and reclamation of tidal land by construction and maintenance of embankments. The State Government are required to appoint a Khar Land Development Board to prepare and carry out schemes for the purposes of this Act. The Board may make a preliminary survey of all the khar and tidal lands in the State and prepare a scheme for each unit with a detailed estimate of the cost of the scheme. The scheme will thereafter be published for eliciting criticism and will be confirmed by the State Government with such modification as may be necessary. After the scheme has come into force, the Board shall execute it in accordance with the rules prescribed in that behalf. The cost of the scheme will be met by a contribution by the Government, the landlords and the tenants in the proportion of 40 : 40 : 20 per cent. respectively.

IRRIGATION

The greatest single factor limiting agricultural production in the Indian Union is the lack in most parts of the country of an adequate well-distributed supply of water. Construction of multi-purpose and large irrigation projects forms part of a long-term scheme for land improvement. In any short-term programme, on the other hand, much can be achieved by improving the existing facilities, e.g., by de-silting tanks, minimising seepage and by the extension of available irrigation facilities. Such improvements are necessary, as they assure an adequate and regular supply of water, which not only increases the productivity and yield of land, but also helps to eliminate the dependence of about 4/5th of the total cultivated area on the vagaries of monsoons. Thus, legislative measures have been taken by the States like Assam, Bihar, Bombay, Madhya Pradesh, Madras, Cochin, Orissa and Madhya Bharat, to improve the existing irrigation facilities. The enactment in these States empower the respective Governments to requisition and acquire land for the construction of new and extension or improvement of existing irrigation works. The legislation in these directions cover the improvement of water courses and construction of channels, and the repair and construction of tanks and the maintenance of embankments and drainage works. The older enactments on irrigation cover a wide range of subjects, like the definition of rights in water, payment of compensation, construction and maintenance of canals, water-courses and private irrigation works, conscription of labour for effecting repairs to irrigation works which are necessary to prevent imminent danger to property, constitution of Irrigation Panchayat and powers to requisition any privately owned tanks, canal or water-courses for purposes of providing irrigation facilities to surrounding lands.

Water-courses and canals.—The Bombay Irrigation Act, 1879 (as amended subsequently), provides for the construction, maintenance and regulation of canals, for the supply of water therefrom and for the levy of water rates. The Act empowers canal officers appointed under the Act to enter any land for regulating water supply, repairing water courses and for taking measures for the prevention of accidents and removal of obstructions to drainage. Any person desiring to construct a new water-course may apply to the canal officer concerned to construct the same on his behalf. The owners of water-courses are bound to maintain such water-courses in proper repair and allow their use to those permitted by the canal-officer and the Collector. If the owner fails to execute work or repair water-course the canal officer may execute the same and recover the cost from the owner. The Act also empowers the canal officer to conscript labour for works or repairs urgently needed in case the labourers required for the purpose cannot be obtained in the ordinary manner.

The Travancore Irrigation Act of 1897 and the Cochin Irrigation Regulation of 1935 classify irrigation works into Major, Minor and Petty Irrigation Works. Major Irrigation Works are those which irrigate an area of land exceeding 200 acres. Petty Irrigation Works under the Travancore Act include all works irrigating an area not exceeding 5 acres and under the Cochin Regulation an area not exceeding 10 acres. Minor Irrigation Works include all irrigation works other than Major and Petty. The construction, repair and maintenance of Major Works devolve on the Government and of Petty Irrigation Works on the proprietors of the lands benefited by such works. In Travancore the Government may determine by Rules the terms of construction and repair of Minor Irrigation Works, while in Cochin the Regulation makes the Government directly responsible for the construction, repair and maintenance of Minor Irrigation Works also. In case the proprietors of lands benefited by the Petty Irrigation Works are unable to carry out the repairs, they may apply to the Government through the Division Peishkar (Government Officer) in Travancore and the Panchayat in Cochin, who may carry out the work with the consent of the Government. If the proprietors fail or refuse to execute the work satisfactorily, the Registrar of Village Panchayats may cause the work to be carried out at Government cost, which will be recovered, pro rata, as arrears of public revenue. In the case of Major Irrigation Works, the Cochin Regulation allows the Government to levy a cess on acreage basis in a manner which will ensure the Government a return of 3 per cent. on the capital outlay after making allowance for depreciation and maintenance.

The Mysore Irrigation Act of 1932 (as subsequently amended) also makes provision for the appointment of Irrigation Officers with powers to enter upon any land for purposes of inspection or regulation of the use of water and management of any irrigation work. Powers are also given to impress labour for urgent works of repair and to cause necessary works of repair to be carried out by the owner or occupier of land in which a water course is situated, or to carry it out himself and recover the cost from the defaulter. The Deputy Commissioner is empowered to constitute Irrigation Panchayats whenever he is satisfied that a demand exists for the same.

The Bihar Public Irrigation and Drainage Works Act, 1946, which supersedes the Bihar Public Irrigation Works Act, 1939, and incorporates some new provisions, is designed to meet the needs of increased demand for irrigation works. Under this Act, the Government, either of their own accord or on report from any person, may draw up a scheme and after hearing the necessary objections, execute it. The lands required for this purpose will be acquired under Land Acquisition Act, 1894. For recovering the costs from the beneficiaries, a register shall be prepared which will contain the list of rates that will have to be paid by the beneficiaries on account of costs and interest charges. If necessary, a cess to cover the costs of maintenance charges will also be levied in addition to the above rates. Bihar has also passed a Private Irrigation Works Act, 1922 (with subsequent amendments), empowering the Collector to issue an order requiring the repair, extension or alteration of any private irrigation work or in cases of emergency to undertake the work himself and recover the cost in the manner prescribed under the Act. The Collector after due enquiry may vest the responsibility for the maintenance of the work on panchayats specially constituted for the purpose, or on the village co-operative society or the village panchayat, in case the person or persons responsible for its maintenance is or are not likely to do so properly.

The West Bengal and Assam Acts for Land Requisition and Acquisition and the Delhi and Ajmer-Merwara Land Development Act, 1948, also enable the Government to acquire land for providing facilities for embankments, irrigation and drainage.

The Madras Irrigation Works (Repairs, Improvement and Construction) Act, 1943, empowers the Government to repair or improve private irrigation works, to construct new irrigation works on private lands and to supply water from Government irrigation works to private irrigation works. The landholders of such estates are entitled to increase their rents from the ryots and the latter are not allowed to refuse a supply of water from such improved irrigation works. Similarly, the Irrigation Works (Construction and Levy of Cess) Act, 1947, passed for Malabar District in Madras empowers the Government to acquire lands in accordance with the provisions of Land Acquisition Act, 1894, for constructing irrigation works of any kind and for utilising the water in any water-course for the purpose of irrigation, even though this may infringe rights of any persons to utilise their water for irrigation. No person will be permitted to interfere with the flow of water in any water channel constructed by the Government. Provision has been made to constitute a special Court for determining compensation to persons whose rights are affected under this Act. In order to regulate the use of water from the new constructions, the Government will issue permits to the cultivators. The latter can appeal to the District Collector if they think it is disadvantageous to them to use water on such terms. The Government will levy water cess according to the prescribed rules. The amendments to C.P. Irrigation Act, 1931, also provide for construction of water courses for irrigation purposes. The Irrigation Panchayats functioning in this State will be responsible for the proper maintenance of such water-courses. Due to poor demand of water for irrigation purposes in certain areas, the Act has provided for a compulsory assessment of water rate for land commanded by State Irrigation Works.

Provisions for the appointment of canal officers, construction and maintenance of works, levy of water-rates, requisitioning of labour, etc., are contained in the Madhya Bharat Irrigation Act, 1950. Water rates are charged on both the occupier as well as the owner. If there are areas where ample prospects of increased cultivation through the resources of irrigation exist, but are not being made full use of, the Government may declare such area as irrigation area and impose a compulsory irrigation cess on such area in order to promote interest of the local public in irrigation.

Tanks.—For the improvement of tanks the Governments of Mysore, Madras, West Bengal, Madhya Pradesh and Cochin have passed special legislation.

The Mysore Act, entitled the Minor Tank Restoration Act, passed in 1916 (and subsequently amended), empowers the Government to take up the restoration of any existing minor tank after due notice. One-fourth of the actual cost of the restoration or one-fourth of the estimated cost is recoverable as contribution from all the raiyats holding lands under the tank in the proportion of the assessment payable on such lands.

The Madras Irrigation Tanks (Improvement) Act, 1949, empowers the Government to raise the full tank level or take measures for raising its capacity or efficiency in all areas whether zamindari, ryotwari or inamdari. Under the West Bengal Act, the Government will first order the owners to carry out the necessary operation to improve a tank that has fallen into disrepair or disuse. In case they fail to do so, or state their inability, the Government will declare the tank to be a derelict irrigation work and may carry out the operations themselves, or authorise a local authority, co-operative society or any other person to do so preference being given to a coparcener. Such an authority, society or person will enjoy the benefits from the tank for a period up to 25 years. The Government can further acquire any adjoining land if it is found necessary. During the period of occupation, the authorised person will have to pay rent and compensation to the owner. Provision has also been made to extend the benefits of increased water facilities to cultivators on payment of a cess. This Act, however does not provide for the construction of any new tanks. The Government pay a subsidy ranging from 33 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent. to 75 per cent. to meet the increased cost of labour wages. Water rate charges are not to exceed Rs. 3 per acre per annum. The Madhya Pradesh Government are also empowered to requisition any private tank, canal or water-course under Act XIX of 1948 when they think it necessary for the purpose of providing better facilities for irrigation. The management of such irrigation works vest with the Government who administer it as other irrigation works in the State. The Bombay Government can also execute schemes for improvement of tanks under the Land Improvement Act, 1942. An Act, called the Preservation of Eries Act (XXIII of 1120) in Cochin requires the owners and persons in possession of Eries, i.e., tanks, canals and other reservoirs used for storing water, etc., to furnish their particulars to the Government within a specified period. They are further prohibited from converting them into wet lands or parambas. The penalty for disobedience of these provisions is Rs. 200 and this can be recovered as arrear of land revenue. If these Eries are not maintained in good order, the Peishkar may require the owners to repair or restore them, failing which the Government will carry out the necessary improvements and recover the expenses incurred on this.

Embankments and drainage.—Proper embankments and drainage facilities are necessary to improve the land and to prevent floods and soil erosion by overflow in rainy season. The State Governments in a number of States, e.g., Bihar, Ajmer, Delhi, Assam, Madras, etc., have assumed necessary powers to construct embankments and drains whenever they consider it necessary. The Assam Embankment and Drainage Act, 1941, empowers the Embankment Officers to enter and survey any lands, to bore, level or do other works which help them to find out whether any improvement is needed. The Embankment Officer is authorised to construct, remove or alter any embankment or drain if it is necessary for the safety of any town or village or for preventing any loss to property. Such schemes will have to be approved by the Deputy Commissioner who will cause it to be published for eliciting public opinion. In cases of grave and imminent danger to life or property, the Embankment Officer may forthwith commence the necessary operations before giving the routine notice. If the interests of any person are adversely affected by the above operations he is entitled to compensation for the damage done to his property. If any person wants to construct any bridge, culvert or syphon in the existing 'public' drain, he may apply to the Deputy Commissioner, who will proceed to examine it after consultation with appropriate authorities. The scheme if accepted will be implemented. The owners and occupiers of all lands who benefit from such schemes will pay rates to meet the costs, which will be recovered as arrears of land revenue. The Act further imposes penalties for grazing cattle, cutting out roots or grass, taking any vehicles or the doing of any other act which may damage the public embankments. The Bihar Public Irrigation and Drainage Works Act 1946 has similar provisions for construction and repair of any drainage work or a scheme for flood control. These works will be maintained by the Government.

PROTECTION OF CROPS FROM PESTS AND DISEASES

The insects, pests and diseases of plants take a very heavy toll of crops annually in almost every State. Several measures have been taken for the control of plant diseases and fungi by propaganda and persuasion through co-operative and other rural development agencies. Owing, however, to the general apathy and ignorance of some of the cultivators and also in the absence of co-ordinated effort on the part of all cultivators in the affected area, it has not been found easy to eradicate these pests and diseases effectively. It is necessary that all the landowners should co-operate, if the measures are to be effectively carried out. It has, therefore, been found necessary for the Government to take powers to coerce the recalcitrant minority to fall in line with the majority in the execution of particular schemes. Accordingly, the Centre as well as some of the State Governments have enacted legislation to acquire powers in notified areas, from where the removal of particular plants and trees can be prohibited in order to localise any fungus or disease. Under the provisions of the Destructive Insects and Pests Act, 1914, the Central Government is empowered to prevent the introduction and transport from one State to another in India of any insect, fungus or other pest which is or may be destructive to crops. The Custom Officers are empowered to execute the provisions of this Act in case of their import. The State Governments have also been empowered to make rules for detention, inspection, disinfection or destruction of any insect etc. which may be harmful for the crops. According to the various State legislations every landholder in the notified area is required to undertake measures as directed by the authorities. Inspectors appointed for the purpose of these Acts may enter the premises within the notified areas to examine the measures taken. In case of non-compliance, they can execute the requisite measures and recover the cost from the owners as if they are arrears of land revenue. The owners will be given compensation for the crops and the trees that are destroyed under the Act. It is further laid down that it is the duty of the Village Officers (Patwaris, Chaukidars and Lamberdars) to report to the Collectors, whenever there is any appearance of insects, pests, plant diseases, etc., in the village. The Acts also provide for fine for non-compliance of the orders given by the Inspectors. The Punjab Act has recently been amended to include 'locusts' in the definition of pests and to have powers to call upon every male persons above 14 years of age to render all possible assistance in carrying out preventive remedial measures for the destruction of locusts. The Punjab Act also empowers the Government to ban for a definite period the growth of specified crops within the notified areas. In this State, the Village Panchayats have also been made responsible for the eradication of weeds from the village common.

CROP REGULATION

Induced at first by the peculiar difficulties created by war and later by the urgent need to increase food production, a number of States took measures, by legislative enactments or administrative orders, to control the production of commercial crops and increase the areas under food crops. The action taken in this direction may be broadly classified under two heads :

- (i) measures taken to regulate crop production on all cultivated lands in an area;
- (ii) measures taken to regulate the growth of crops in areas which are being newly brought under cultivation.

These measures have generally taken three forms: (a) regulations imposed by legislation or ordinances, (b) administrative orders under the provisions at first of the Defence of India Act and later of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, etc., and (c) indirect incentives, like subsidies, price adjustments, etc.

Under the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, the Central Government may issue any order which may provide for bringing under cultivation any waste or arable land, whether appurtenant to a building or not, for the growing thereon of food crops generally or of specified food crops, and for either maintaining or increasing the cultivation of food crops generally, or of specified food crops.

The most important legislative measure taken by the States for the purpose is the Bombay Growth of Food Crops Act, which was passed in 1944 and which expired and was re-enacted in 1948. The Act has been extended to Kutch and also adopted in Suarashtra by an Ordinance called the Saurashtra Growth of Food Crops Ordinance in 1948. Under the Bombay Act, the Government can order (i) that in any specified area, the proportion of scheduled food crops to other crops grown by a cultivator in his holding shall not be less than the existing proportion, (ii) prescribe the maximum proportion of non-food crops and minimum proportion of food crops, to be grown, and (iii) prohibit the growing of non-food crops in successive years. The Government are also empowered to give incentive to cultivators for raising food crops by fixing or guaranteeing prices of foodgrains and by reducing any part of land revenue, irrigation dues, etc., in respect of lands where crops are grown on the order of the Government. Similar concessions in rent can also be extended to the tenants on their application to the Mamlatdar. As a result of this measure, it is claimed, that the area under cotton considerably decreased (by about 60%), a very large part of which was diverted to food crops and some part possibly to groundnut. With the relaxation of restrictions in 1949-50, however, the area under cotton has again increased. Another instance of a similar measure is the Madhya Bharat Crop Control Order, 1949, issued under the powers conferred by sections 4 and 5 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, whereby the Government may, by a notification in the Gazette, declare from time to time (a) "the proportion in which the food crops and the crops other than food crops shall be grown by a cultivator in his Khata, and (b) the proportion in which food crops shall be grown in the land allotted for crops other than food crops". Under both these measures, penalties are provided for non-compliance and the offences are made cognizable.

The Hyderabad Restriction of Cash Crop Regulation, 1353 F., also tries to encourage growing of food crops by levying a tax for commercial crops in addition to the land revenue at such rates as the President in Council may prescribe. Besides this, the President-in-Council may also impose a commercial tax on the sales or the processing in respect of such crops. The sums realised in this way will be credited to a separate fund which will be utilised for inducing the growing of food crops. The cultivator who grows approved mixed crops in the required proportions will, however, be exempted from the above taxes on commercial crops. He shall also have the right to sell food crops grown by him to Government at the price fixed by Government from time to time.

More specific measures for the encouragement of a particular crop or varieties of a crop have also been taken in some of the States. Section 7 of the Madras Essential Articles Control and Requisitioning (Temporary Powers) Act, 1949 (XXIX of 1949), for instance, empowered the Government to control agriculture by—

- (i) prohibiting, restricting, or otherwise controlling the cultivation of specified crops, and
- (ii) bringing under cultivation any waste or arable land, whether appurtenant to a building or not, and for the growing therein of specified crops.

In Cochin, similarly, under Proclamation III of 1123, “the doing of any act which is liable to reduce the output of paddy is prohibited”. In pursuance of this Regulation, the growing of groundnut has been prohibited in some districts in the States. Steps were taken to divert land from cotton to other crops, but these restrictions have now been withdrawn in most cases. The Cotton Control Acts which were in force in Bombay (1947), Madras (1932), Madhya Pradesh, Mysore (1942), etc., provided for the growth of only particular varieties of cotton in any tract. In Madras, for instance, growth of “pulichai” cotton was prohibited for three years in 4 districts in 1947.

The objectives are also sought to be achieved by the provision of indirect incentives. Some of the State Governments have attempted to encourage the cultivation of food crops by making it compulsory on the recipients of subsidies to grow only food crops for a specified number of years. In Madras, for instance, the grantees of subsidies, under the new well subsidies scheme, are required to undertake to raise only food crops for the next six years in the ayacuts of subsidised wells. The definition of food crops has been laid down to include cereals and subsidiary crops like potatoes, sweet potatoes and plantains. In Mysore, likewise, certain concessions have been given under various administrative orders to the cultivators who are growing irrigated ragi, paddy and coconuts. In Cochin, by Proclamation XIII of 1117 (1942) the tenants who have been given leases in pursuance of the Scheme for Food Production are not entitled to recover the value of any improvements effected by them during the period of the lease.

In some States like the Punjab, Madras and the Madhya Pradesh, these restrictions have been applied only to the areas which are newly reclaimed or were previously left fallow. Thus, under the East Punjab Utilization of Lands Act, 1949 (as amended subsequently), the Government can take over lands which are left uncultivated for two seasons or more and lease the same to a tenant for a period not exceeding eight years for growing food and fodder crops. If the tenant does not grow these crops he will be liable to be fined, which may be upto twice the rent that he is required to pay for the lease. In Mysore, the holder of occupied lands is required to raise an approved crop on the fallow land which he is compelled to bring under cultivation in accordance with the Mysore Cultivation of Fallow Land Act, 1951.* The approved crops have been defined to be ragi paddy or jola crop and includes such other crops as the State Government may declare by notification in the Gazette. The State Government have further issued directives that all persons whose lands are tractor-ploughed, under the scheme for the establishment of machine tractors, should grow food crops in at least 3/5th of the total ploughed land in a period of five years after ploughing.

The Madras Land Utilization Order, 1950, like the Madhya Bharat Order, is issued under the Essential Supplies (Temporary) Act, 1946. This order empowers the Collector to direct any holder of unoccupied waste arable land which has not been cultivated in the previous season to cultivate it with food crops personally or through a lessee. Failure to comply with it will make their right to cultivate liable to be sold for a period of three years.

* A similar provision which existed in the C. P. & Berar Cultivation of Fallow Lands Act, 1948, as amended in 1949, has since been repealed.

The Madhya Bharat Land Utilisation Act, Samvat 2007, similarly makes it incumbent on the cultivators to bring under foodgrains at least 40% and 70% of the fallow land brought under cultivation by them in accordance with this Act during the first and second years respectively.

GENERAL DEVELOPMENT MEASURES

In addition to some of the specific measures mentioned above, legislation has been enacted in some of the States for initiating general development schemes in rural areas and schemes for improvement in the living standards of the rural community. The U.P. Rural Development (Requisition of Land) Act, 1948, as amended in 1949, and the Madhya Bharat Requisitioning of Land (Rural Development) Act, 1950, are measures in this direction. Under these Acts, the Government can requisition lands for public 'purposes', which may inter alia include making, deepening or enlarging of tanks, composting of refuse, planting nurseries, maintenance of pasturage and construction of drainage channels and water-courses. Under the Madhya Bharat Act, any Officer employed for the purpose by the Government may enter and inspect any land for the purpose of determining whether the land is needed, or is likely to be needed, for a public purpose. The Co-operative Societies or Village Panchayats (Gaon Sabhas) are also entitled to apply for requisition of land for the above purpose. They can further be entrusted with the management of such lands when it is requisitioned by the Government. The owners will be given compensation under Land Acquisition Acts or, as in U. P., according to the mode of calculation provided in the Act. The scope of the West Bengal Land Development and Planning Act, 1948, covers (i) the settlement of refugees, (ii) establishment of model villages, towns and agricultural colonies, (iii) the creation of better living conditions in urban and rural areas, and (iv) improvement and development of agriculture, forestry, fisheries and industries. The Government may direct the prescribed authorities to prepare a development scheme and cause it to be executed. The Government can acquire lands for public purposes and let it on hire, lease, sell or otherwise dispose of it, preference for taking a lease or purchase being given first to the persons from whom such lands have been taken. This Act differs from the Acts in U.P. and Madhya Bharat in one other important respect in that the execution of schemes may be given to a company or local authority, instead of the co-operative societies or village panchayats, as provided in the latter case. The Assam Government have similarly assumed powers for these purposes under the Assam Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948. To some extent, the main objects of rural development are covered in the Bombay Land Improvement Schemes Act and the Delhi and Ajmer-Merwara Land Development Act, mentioned previously.

Village Commons.—In order to prevent encroachments on roads, pathways and easements and also for providing necessary land for common purposes like grazing, threshing, etc., the State Governments are authorised to set apart any area for these purposes. This has been incorporated in the Zamindari Abolition Legislation of U.P., Madhya Pradesh and Bombay. Under the Land Improvement Schemes Act in Bombay, and the Land Development Act, Delhi and Ajmer, the Government can draw up schemes for the control of grazing and firing of grasses. The Tenancy Amendment Act, 1946, in Orissa similarly permits the Government to set apart any area for these purposes when they consider it necessary. Under the Acts passed for the cultivation of fallow and waste lands, the area under common purposes is excluded from the scope of the acts. In some other States, these lands have been vested in the village community who will manage them in the best interests of all.

CONCLUSION

It will thus be seen from the foregoing review of the legislation affecting agricultural production in recent years that great efforts are being made for the rehabilitation and the improvement of the entire agricultural economy of the country. Much of the legislation covering agricultural production in recent years is born out of the stern necessity of improving the quantity and quality of agricultural produce in the face of the rapidly mounting requirements needed to keep the growing population in a state of reasonable comfort. The Acts already passed in some of the States have been alluded to. In others, legislation is still under consideration. In many States, where no legislation appears to have been passed on any particular subject, the ends of policy are sought to be realised by administrative orders and by a judicious mixture of concessions in direct financial inducements and a certain degree of compulsion. The full significance of these measures will be known only after a few years. It is, as yet, too early to assess the achievements and record failures or success. In a vast country like India, where conditions vary so much from place to place and where in the past agriculture had received scant attention from the Government, it is not surprising that there should be such a vast number and variety of enactments. It is also to be expected that there will be variations in the methods of approach to the specific problems affecting agriculture in each State, but within these limitations, and subject to these technical difficulties, the broad policy of improving agriculture is fairly clear from the various enactments that have been passed and enforced in different States in the country. It is apparent from these that better farming cannot be secured unless certain norms are set for the farming community framed in the context of the experiences of different regions, and certain sanctions are created for enforcing improvement in the desired directions. There is at present a keener perception of the fact that better farming has to precede better business and better living and that the achievement of better living standards by the rural community is indissolubly bound up with better methods of production.

with regard to irrigation from private tanks.

Provided that no water-rate shall be charged if, on enquiry it is found that the increase in the area has been due to any improvement of the private work made since the settlement.

Land deriv-

waste water.

50. The Government reserves the right to charge water cess at the rates prescribed in the Rules to be made under this Act, from time to time, on the cultivation made by the water which is discharged as waste water, after being used for the purpose other than cultivation and passes through or across such land as is not owned by the person or persons who discharges the waste water after his or their use for the purpose other than cultivation.

Cultivation outside tanks by discharged water. Water rate chargeable as canal water.

53. The provisions of sections 51 and 52 are applicable to the tanks classed 'major tanks', and have nothing to do with the tanks classed as 'minor tanks', which shall be assessed by the settlement authorities at wet rates at the time of settlement, and the assessment shall remain operative till the next settlement. Assessment of minor tanks by the settlement authorities.

54. The Government, if satisfied after exhaustive enquiry, that a certain village or certain area has ample prospects of increased cultivation through the resources of irrigation natural or artificial, existing in the village or area but those resources are not being exploited by the local public and therefore thinking it expedient that the said existing resources of water be utilised to its fullest extent by promoting interest of the local public in irrigation, may by a notification in the official Gazette declare such village or such area as irrigation area and impose on such village or area on the whole or in part, by assessment, compulsory irrigation-cess at the rates prescribed in the Rules to be made under this section from time to time. 56. Whenever it appears to the Government that injury to any land or the public health or public convenience has arisen or may arise from the obstruction of any river, stream or drainage-channel the Government may, by notification published in the official Gazette, prohibit, within limits to be defined in such notification, the formation of any obstruction, or may within such limits, order the removal or other modification of such obstruction. Power to prohibit obstructions or their removal.

Thereupon so much of the said river, stream or drainage-channel as is comprised within such limits, shall be held to be a drainage work as defined in section 2.

57. The Divisional or District Canal Officer or other person authorised by the Government in that behalf may, after such publication, issue an order to the person causing or having control over any such obstruction to remove or modify the same within a time to be fixed in the order. Power to remove obstructions after prohibition.

If within the time so fixed such person does not comply with the order, the said Canal Officer may himself remove or modify the obstruction, and if the person to whom the order was issued does not, when called upon, pay the expenses involved in such removal or modifications such expenses shall be recoverable by the Suba from him or his representative in interest as an arrear of land revenue.

Preparation of scheme for works of improvement.

58. Whenever it appears to the Government that any drainage works are necessary for the improvement of any lands, or for the proper cultivation or irrigation thereof; or that protection from floods or other accumulations of water or from erosion by a river, is required for any lands;

the Government may cause a scheme for such drainage works to be drawn up and published, together with an estimate of its cost and a statement of the proportion of such cost which the Government proposes to defray, and a schedule of lands which it is proposed to make chargeable in respect of the scheme.

Powers of persons employed on such scheme.

59. The persons authorised by the Government to draw up such scheme may exercise all or any of the powers conferred on Canal Officers by section 14.

Rate on lands benefited by works.

60. An annual rate in respect of such scheme may be charged according to rules to be made by the Government, on the owners of all lands which shall, in the manner prescribed by such rules, be determined to be so chargeable.

Such rate shall be fixed as nearly as possible so as not to exceed either of the following limits :—

- (1) Six per cent. per annum on the first cost of works, adding thereto the estimated yearly cost of maintenance and supervision of the same and deducting therefrom the estimated income, if any, derived from the works, excluding the said rate.
- (2) In the case of agricultural land, the sum, which under the rules then in force for the assessment of land revenue, might be assessed on such land on account of the increase of annual value or produce thereof caused by the drainage work.

Such rate may be varied from time to time, within such maximum, by the Government.

So far as any defect to be remedied is due to any canal water-course, road or other work or obstruction constructed or caused by the Government or by any person, a proportionate share of the cost of the drainage works required for the remedy of the said defect shall be borne by such Government or such person as the case may be.

Recovery rate.

61. Any such drainage-rate may be collected and recovered in the manner provided by section 55 for collection and recovery of water-rates.

62. Whenever, in pursuance of a notification made under section 56 any obstruction is removed or modified, or whenever any drainage work is carried out under section 58, ^{Disposal of claims to compensation.}

The Suba may from time to time add to or alter such list or any part thereof.

In case of every such labourer, the payment shall continue for the whole period during which he is, in consequence of the provisions of this part, prevented from following his ordinary occupation.

The Government may direct that the provisions of this Part shall apply, either permanently or temporarily (as the case may be) to any district or part of a district for the purpose of effecting necessary annual silt-clearances, or to prevent the proper operation of a canal or drainage work being stopped or so much interfered with as to stop the established course of irrigation or drainage.

Liability of labourers under requisition. 67. When any requisition has been made on any person named in the list, every labourer ordinarily resident within the village or estate of such person shall be liable to supply, and to continue to supply his labour, for the purpose aforesaid.
